

Get a Website, Get Happy, Get Paid:

Using a Website to Create the Life of Your Dreams.

by Jessica Mullen • Updated 2.22.11

1. Get a website

Start talking about what you are grateful for. Do it every single day. Make it your number one goal to get in a good mood before doing anything else. When you feel good, you get inspired. You attract good, lucrative ideas when you feel good. You attract bad ideas when you feel bad. It's the law of attraction.

In addition to sharing what you're grateful for, you can also write about things that would be nice if they happened, things you intend to do today, things you love, things you're excited about, things you appreciate, feelings you want to feel, advice from your higher self, or thoughts you'd like to think.

Your website is a place to consciously practice feeling good. Be fearless and say whatever you want, as long as it feels good. By directing your thoughts on your website, you practice the following:

1. not caring about what people think
2. loving yourself by believing what you have to say is valuable
3. deciding who you want to be and telling the world

Offline, it's important to meditate and exercise every day. Doing these things helps you stay in the flow of well being. Drink lots of water. Breathe deeply.

2. Get Happy

Once you consistently feel good, focus on the journey of monetizing your website. People already like your website because all you talk about are uplifting things like what you're grateful for and what you love. Now it's time to show them something really inspiring: your passion.

Find what you are passionate about and write articles about it. When you know what your site is about, you know what your life is about. My life is about lifestreaming, life design and love. What's yours about?

Build your reputation by giving your ideas away for free. Distill your days into "how-to" articles. Look for the positive aspects of every situation. Teach by sharing your life experience. When you have a realization about yourself, translate it into an article that can help someone in a similar situation.

Your job is to feel good.

To make money at your job, teach others how to feel good.

3. Get Paid

Once you have a solid reputation as an uplifting, inspiring teacher, start making things to sell. Lots of things. A new thing a week. You don't know what people will buy from you. You don't know how to sell them things yet. But if you try something new every week, you'll learn fast.

- Make your life easy by selling digital products. Ebooks, videos, and audio are good examples. You only have to make the product once and then you have unlimited inventory.
- Use PayPal buttons to make the purchasing process easy for yourself and your audience.
- Set up a free mailing list with Mailchimp and give your audience an incentive to sign up for it. Then you have a targeted list of people to advertise your products to.

- While you're making things to sell, set up some passive income streams like Google AdSense or a blip.tv account for your videos.
- Set up an affiliate program. Find a product you love that you think your audience would be interested in buying. When someone buys that product by clicking the link on your site, you get a cut. I sell Bluehost webhosting because it's the company I use to host my sites.

Remember, your goal is to teach people ways to feel good. Your best content should be free so they trust that you know what you're doing. But your audience will pay for shortcuts to feeling good. Not everyone has time to read every article on your site.

Collect and synthesize your absolute best ideas and create products from them.

Your products should either save your audience time or give them a mind-blowing enjoyable experience. Attention is our most precious resource, so either don't require too much of it or make sure it's focused on something that feels really good.

When you genuinely help your audience feel good, their lives will improve. Good feelings attract good experiences. When you help someone's life improve, you have a customer for life.

You purchased this product because you want to get paid doing what you love. All you need to do to make that happen is believe in yourself. Make the leap of faith that this will work for you and never look back. You are a brilliant, creative individual who has something unique to share with the world that others will pay to experience. The only thing holding you back from success is you!

3.1 Let Go

The universe will take care of you if you let it. You came to this world to have fun, enjoy life, and create new ideas. You did not come here to suffer and work to make someone else's dreams happen. Make the decision that your ideas are worth spreading, because no one else will do it for you.

Do not check for monetary evidence. Simply trust that things are in motion and the abundance you have created is on its way.